

(or dare we say, colorblind) way of interpreting architectural form. One way of honoring this truth is to avoid participating in the historical erasure of Black architectural genius. It has not taken the form of subjectivity Johnson and Hitchcock outlined because it was not of the register of the European settler subject. We honor it by not erasing it under the false label of a universal style of building since no such thing can exist.

Bibliography

M. Christine Boyer. Le Corbusier: Homme de Lettres (New York: Princeton Architectural Press, 2011), pp.433-485

Jimena Canales and Andrew Herscher, "Criminal Skins: Tattoos and Modern Architecture in the Work of Adolf Loos," Architectural History, vol. 48 (2005): 235-256.

Irene Cheng, "Structural Racialism in Modern Architectural Theory," in Race and Modern Architecture, edited by Irene Cheng, Charles L. Davis II, and Mabel O. Wilson (Pittsburgh: University of Pittsburgh Press, 2020), pp.134-152.

Anne Cheng. Second Skin: Josephine Baker and the Modern Surface (New York: Oxford University Press, 2011)

Mark Crinson. Empire Building: Orientalism and Victorian Architecture (New York: Routledge, 1996)

Fares el-Dahdah, "The Josephine Baker House: For Loss' Pleasure," in Assemblage, no.26 (Apr. 1995): 72-87.

Shantrelle P. Lewis. Dandy Lion: The Black Dandy and Street Style (New York: Aperture Foundation, 2017)

Christopher Long, "The Origins and Context of Adolf Loos' 'Ornament and Crime,'" in Journal of the Society of Architectural Historians, vol.68, no.2 (June 2009): 200-223.